He suggested to avoid any misunderstanding, that non-governmental organizations, such as Amnesty International, that had made an official request, be authorized to go to Indonesia to assess the situation for themselves, since their requests for authorization had still not been met.

side. The special measures taken in full conformity with the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the presence of the police in Kosovo served no other purpose but to establish order and equality between the peoples and the Albanian minority in Kosovo and to prevent an armed confrontation. She also drew a parallel between the situation in Kosovo and concerns expressed in the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination in relation to article 1, paragraph 4, of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination concerning measures taken for advancement of certain ethnic groups that, if continued after the achievement of such objectives, would lead to a positive discrimination of those vis-à-vis other groups. The proclamation, by a part of the provincial Assembly members, of the Serbian province of Kosovo as a republic was an illegal act, in direct violation of the Federal and Republican Constitutions. Both the Federal Presidency and the Federal Assembly condemned it as a violation of the integrity and sovereignty of the Republic of Serbia and Yugoslavia as a whole.

Three months later, that non-governmental organization repeated, in all seriousness, before the Sub-Commission that it was still awaiting the expected results. In addition, and quoting the relevant part of the same report which that organization had distributed to the Sub-Commission, she seriously questioned the integrity of a human rights defender who, at the same time regretting Albanian victims, remarked a more than year-long absence of victims amongst the Serbs. What the Greek Cypriot people had to decide once and for all was whether they were prepared to share the power with the Turkish Cypriot people as an equal partner, within a federation where one partner would not dominate the other, and if they were ready to close the door on all forms of enosis. That was the essential point.
